Market Comments

As has been widely noted, investment results in the recent past have been materially better for growth indices relative to value indices. Year-to-date 2018, for example, the Russell 1000 Growth return is 7.25% and the Russell 1000 Value Index is -1.69%. Additionally, the entire 2018 gain in the SP500 is attributable to just seven large capitalizations companies. These trends have led some to question the merits of value investing, but we remain committed to the wisdom of the approach.

Instead of paying high prices for distant growth prospects, we prefer to invest in what we consider to be good businesses when, in our judgement, valuations discount little or no growth. We believe this provides a measurable margin of safety. Additionally, we are more interested in how companies allocate capital. Our goal is to reduce the range of uncertainty by focusing on a company's demonstrated record instead of extended forecasts, and paying reasonable prices when expectations are modest. In that vein, the estimated forward price- earnings ratio for the Large Value Equity Composite is currently 12.6x, which compares to 16.3x for the Standard & Poor's 500 Index. With trade tensions, inflation and interest rates on the rise, we are very comfortable with this valuation discount relative to the market.

We thank you for your continued support.

The S&P 500 Index is a widely recognized unmanaged index of equity prices and is representative of a broader market and range of securities than is found in the composite. The Index returns do not reflect the deduction of expenses, which have been deducted from the composite's returns. The Index return assumes reinvestment of all distributions and does not reflect the deduction of taxes and fees.

The Russell 1000® Value Index measures the performance of the large-cap value segment of the U.S. equity universe. It includes those Russell 1000 Index companies with lower price-to-book ratios and lower forecasted growth values.
